The Abyss	1989	171 mins	Adventure; Science Fiction; Action	James Cameron	USA		A group of NAVY SEALS and oil drillers are trapped under the ocean during a storm, and cut off from the ships above them. The group discovers that intelligent life actually exists, and it is underwater instead of in outer space. The confined space and realization that aliens exist effects each character differently. Good or evil intentions are the question asked not only by the humans but by the aliens as well. Human nature is tested as each person decides what they are willing to risk in order to protect others. The tension finally boils over, and the entire group is put at risk through selfish acts of a select few.
Adaptation.	2002	114 mins	Comedy; Drama	Spike Jonze	USA		A lovelorn screenwriter turns to his less talented twin brother for help when his efforts to adapt a non-fiction book go nowhere.
Air Force One	1997	124 mins	Drama; Adventure; Thriller; Action	Wolfgang Petersen	USA		Air Force One is high-jacked by a group of Russian terrorists lead by Ivan Korshunov (Gary Oldman). They enter the plane disguised as reporters. Upon taking over the airplane, the terrorists demand the release of their leader from a Russian prison in exchange for the lives of the people on board, including the President's family. Unknown to the terrorists, President James Marshall (Harrison Ford) secretly remains on the airplane instead of escaping in his special presidential escape pod, and proceeds to stall their plans as best he can, including draining the airplane's fuel tanks. His ex-military training helps him gain the upper hand, and he manages to defeat the terrorists and free the hostages.
Alien	1979	111 mins	Horror; Science Fiction; Thriller	James Cameron; Ridley Scott	UK		Sometime in the future a space ship and its crew land on a mysterious planet. While exploring the planet one of the crew members is attacked by what seems to be some kind of plant that attaches to his face. Back on board he undergoes what appears to be successful surgery to detach the strange plant. However, later he begins to have what appears to be a seizure. In a now famous scene a small animal, the alien of the title, bursts from his stomach and then runs off to hide in the vents of space ship. The alien, now loose on the ship, grows at an alarming rate and begins picking off the remaining members of the crew one by one. Finally, only, Ridley (Sigourney Weaver) remains to fight the alien.
Alien 3	1992	114 mins	Action; Drama; Horror; Science	David Fincher	USA		The film begins with Ripley, Newt, Hicks, and the droid Bishop aboard their escape vessel that they boarded in Aliens. The ship crashes on a prison colony planet, killing Hicks, Newt, and destroying Bishop. Ripley is revived from cryo-sleep by the prison crew and discovers that she is the only survivor from the escape pod. After calling the Company for assistance, they wait for Ripley to leave the planet as she is creating tension among the inhabitants. After awhile, Ripley begins to discover dead prisoners that have been killed in a similar manner to the others killed by the aliens in the previous films. Once this is discovered, Ripley and the other prisoners must figure out a way to kill the alien in the ventilation shafts. However, they soon find that there is more than one alien on the planet...

Aliens	1986	137 mins	Action; Horror; Science Fiction; Thriller	James Cameron	USA	Ellen Ripley (Sigourney Weaver) awakes after 57 years in hypersleep. She is the only one who survived the Alien's first attack (see the original film, Alien 1979). But when she tries to tell people about the creature they do not believe her. They have even built a colony on the moon where Ripley's ship Nostromo was attacked. Even after communication is lost to the colony, people still don't believe Ripley's warnings. Of course, a huge battle gets underway, pitting the humans against the Aliens which seem stronger, faster and greater numbered. The only human who knows anything about the Aliens is Ripley. She does everything in her power to save everyone she can, including a young girl called Newt (Carrie Henn) who has managed to evade the Aliens by hiding in the ventilation systems on the terra-formed moon.
All That Jazz		123 mins			USA	Choreographer-turned-director Bob Fosse (Cabaret , Lenny) turns the camera on himself in this nervy, sometimes unnerving 1979 feature, a nakedly autobiographical piece that veers from gritty drama to razzle-dazzle musical, allegory to satire. It's an indication of his bravura, and possibly his self-absorption, that Fosse (who also cowrote the script) literally opens alter ego Joe Gideon's heart in a key scene--an unflinching glimpse of cardiac surgery, shot during an actual open-heart procedure. Roy Scheider makes a brave and largely successful leap out of his usual romantic lead roles to step into Gideon's dancing pumps, and supplies a plausible sketch of an extravagant, self-destructive, self-loathing creative dynamo, while Jessica Lange serves as a largely allegorical Muse, one of the various women that the philandering Gideon pursues (and usually abandons). Gideon's other romantic partners include Fosse's own protégé (and a major keeper of his choreographic style since his death), Ann Reinking, whose leggy grace is seductive both "onstage" and off. Fosse/Gideon's collision course with mortality, as well as his priapic obsession with the opposite sex, may offer clues into the libidinal core of the choreographer's dynamic, sexualized style of dance, but musical aficionados will be forgiven for fast-forwarding to cut out the self-analysis and focus on the music, period. At its best--as in the knockout opening, scored to George Benson's strutting version of "On Broadway," which fuses music, dance, and dazzling camera work into a paeon to Fosse's hooper nation-- All That Jazz offers a sequence of classic Fosse numbers, hard-edged, caustic, and joyously physical. -- Sam Sutherland

Battlestar Galactica: The Miniseries	2003	183 mins	Adventure; Science Fiction; Action	Michael Rymer	USA	It's been more than forty years since anyone has seen or heard from the Cylons, more than forty years since an armistice brought an end to their bloody uprising against their human creators and sent them off to a world they could freely call their own. And this year, just like every other, the humans send an emissary to the Armistice Space Station, constructed in the hopes that the humans and Cylons could somehow learn to coexist diplomatically. And every year, the Cylons fail to show. But this year is different. This year, someone is coming. Cylon centurions enter the station accompanied by a human woman. Right before the station is destroyed, and soon after, all twelve of the human colonies in a stealth attack by the Cylons meant to wipe out all of humanity. All that remains is a handful of survivors, a rag-tag collection of ships in which to house those lucky enough to be chosen to leave their destroyed homes, and one ancient Battlestar ship, the Galactica, once scheduled for decommission, to protect them all.
Big Fish	2003	125 mins	Comedy; Drama; Adventure; Family; Fantasy	Tim Burton	USA	Will Bloom (Billy Crudup) never really believed his father's outlandish stories. In fact he never really felt like his father (Albert Finney) was much of a man at all. While Will is practical and down-to-earth, his father seems to neglect his responsibilities and spend all his time on imaginary adventures. Will stopped speaking to his father three years ago and has very little respect for him. However, when his mother (Jessica Lange) asks him to please come to his dying father's bedside, to try to reconcile and spend his last days together, he gets on a plane and goes, as a dutiful son. Much to Will's chagrin, the dying father he encounters is unrepentant and continues to tell tall tales. However, as Will begins researching things to prove his father wrong, he finds more and more truth than he ever expected.

On the other hand, the police chief Oliver Queenan (Martin Sheen) has played the same game on Costello by putting one of his shrewd officer, Billy Costigan (Leonardo DiCaprio), in the gang. Billy gains the confidence of Costello and soon becomes his left hand. Both Billy and Colin live a dangerous life gathering and transferring the information about plans of the agency they penetrated. Soon it becomes clear to both the parties that there is a mole amongst them. This leads to a cat-and-mouse game where both the groups desperately seek to identify the mole amongst them, leading to ample bloodshed.
Desperado	1995	103 mins	Western; Thriller; Romance	Robert Rodriguez	USA		"Desperado" continues the story of a musician with a mission. This time around the story finds our hero with a sore hand and a dead girlfriend. Looking for work, this marauding musician (Antonio Banderas) stumbles into a case of mistaken identity and must fight his way out. Along the way he meets a beautiful woman (Salma Hayek) and takes revenge on the local drug lord, personally showing him his guitar full of dirty tricks. Loosely based on the Westerns of years before, "Desperado" succeeds greatly at telling an entertaining story with little fluff and lots of good times.

The Devil Wears Prada	2006	109 mins	Comedy; Drama	David Frankel	USA	A naive young woman comes to New York and scores a job as the assistant to one of the city's biggest magazine editors, the ruthless and cynical Miranda Priestly.

Don Juan Demarco	1995	97 mins	Comedy; Drama; Romance	Jeremy Leven	USA	A psychiatrist must cure a young patient that presents himself as Don Juan, the greatest lover in the world.
Double Jeopardy	1999	105 mins		Bruce Beresford	USA	Young Libby Parsons (Ashley Judd) is happy as a clam, and why not? She's got a loving, successful husband (Bruce Greenwood), an adorable son, and an island home to die for. One morning, after a romantic sailing expedition with her husband, Libby finds herself covered in blood. Her husband's missing, the boat resembles a murder scene, and there's a knife on the deck. One might stop right there and call for help; Libby, however, takes matters--or, more specifically, the knife--into her own hands, and the moment she does, there's the Coast Guard. Faster than you can say frame-up, Libby's been charged with murder and jailed, with her young son stripped from her custody. It's all cut-and-dried, except for one thing: Libby's husband isn't dead, and she's about to track him down. And thanks to the Fifth Amendment's double jeopardy rule, she can't be charged twice for his murder.
						Double Jeopardy has a singularly seductive revenge premise and, in Judd, one of the most seductive leading ladies to grace the silver screen in recent years. So then why does this thriller feel like it came from the bottom of the Lifetime television movie barrel? Instead of taking a gritty, hard-boiled approach, the film plays up all of Libby's mushy emotions--tellingly, the director here is Bruce Beresford, whose best film, Driving Miss Daisy , is as far from thriller territory as you can get. No matter how stoically or deviously Judd plays her, Libby comes across as a soccer mom with a slight taste for blood. Only in a few scenes, specifically when she tracks her wily husband to his new identity in New Orleans, does Judd get to strut her stuff, stealing an evening gown and crashing his charity auction. Most of the time, though, this thriller offers only a smattering of suspense. Well, at least like Libby, the filmmakers can't be condemned twice for the same crime. With Tommy Lee Jones duplicating his Fugitive role, as Libby's conscientious parole officer. --Mark Englehart

Down Periscope	1996	92 mins	Comedy; Adventure	David S. Ward	USA	Tom Dodge (Kelsey Grammar) is a wasted talent in the US Navy. His unorthodox methods, a crash with a Russian submarine, resulting fight and tattoo on his male body part have all conspired to keep him from own command. His main adversary his Rear Admiral Yancy Grahm (Bruce Dern). If he does not receive his command soon he will be dropped from the command program. Vice Admiral Dean Winslow (Rip Torn) convinces the Navy to give Dodge one final chance. He is given an old Diesel Submarine and has to try and infiltrate and target two cities in Virginia and a mock battleship in Norfolk during a Navy Wargame. To prevent Dodge from succeeding Grahm fits him with all the rejects from the Navy. Among the crew is Lt. Emily Lake (Lauren Holly) who is the first female dive officer in the Navy and Executive Officer Marty Pascal (Rob Schiender) who has dreams of his own command. Dodge must try to win this Wargame with his outdated ship and seemingly incompetent crew to have any future in the Navy.

						Thematically ambitious and emotionally complex, Clint Eastwood's Flags of Our Fathers is an intimate epic with much to say about war and the nature of heroism in America. Based on the non-fiction bestseller by James Bradley (with Ron Powers), and adapted by Million Dollar Baby screenwriter Paul Haggis (Jarhead screenwriter William Broyles Jr. wrote an earlier draft that was abandoned when Eastwood signed on to direct), this isn't so much a conventional war movie as it is a thought-provoking meditation on our collective need for heroes, even at the expense of those we deem heroic. In telling the story of the six men (five Marines, one Navy medic) who raised the American flag of victory on the battle-ravaged Japanese island of Iwo Jima on February 23rd, 1945, Eastwood takes us deep into the horror of war (in painstakingly authentic Iwo Jima battle scenes) while emphasizing how three of the surviving flag-raisers (played by Adam Beach, Ryan Phillippe, and Jesse Bradford) became reluctant celebrities - and resentful pawns in a

Amidst the chaos, Dr. Kimble escapes. Now a fugitive, he's pursued by US Marshall Sam Gerard (Tommy Lee Jones). Gerard gets close to capturing him several times, but eventually he gets away. Gerard rounds up other escaped prisoners, while Kimble goes looking for the one-armed man. He returns to Chicago where a medical friend, Charles Nichols (Jeroen Krabbe), helps him. Kimble gets an apartment and a hospital job so that he can look through the prothesis records for the one-armed man. He suspects the man was working for a medical company interested in doing big business with Kimble's hospital. He finds the one-armed man on a subway, disables him, and heads to a convention the hospital is having with the medical firm. He realizes he was targeted because he was doing tests that would have put a kabosh on big plans the company had in the works. The Good Shepherd	2006	168 mins			USA	A complicated movie about the Central Intelligence Agency and its agents, The Good Shepherd isn't your typical spy movie. Though it stars Matt Damon (The Bourne Identity films) and Angelina Jolie (Mr. & Mrs. Smith , Lara Croft franchise)--actors with considerable experience in the action-espionage genre-- The Good Shepherd requires that they play more subdued and (much less interesting) characters here. The movie focuses on the career of Edward Wilson (Damon), a privileged Yale graduate who goes on to help found the CIA. He is a quiet, serious, and guarded man, even in the most intimate moments with his civilian wife (Jolie, in a role that wastes her talent). Set against a backdrop of real-life events such as the Bay of Pigs, The Good Shepherd is meticulous in creating a realistic timeframe. The film gets a jolt of excitement when Robert DeNiro (in his first directing role since 1993's A Bronx Tale) peppers the screen with appearances by Joe Pesci, Alec Baldwin, and William Hurt. But those moments are too infrequent. At 157

						minutes long, the film is crammed with many factual details, but the characters are shortchanged when it comes to development. Viewers have to wonder why anyone, much less someone like Wilson who has everything going for him, would devote his life to a thankless job that brings so little happiness to himself and his family. The Good Shepherd is an ambitious but flawed film. The actors do a formidable job with a well-intentioned but meandering script. However, we meet so many characters and learn so little about each that it's difficult to drum up much empathy for any of them. --Jae-Ha Kim A boy genius from the wrong side of the tracks finds his way into a university as a janitor. Grey's Anatomy - The Complete Second Season	2005	1180 mins	Comedy; Drama	David Paymer; Adam Davidson; Peter Horton	USA	Experience the complete second season of TV's most compelling show in an expansive 27-episode DVD set. Witness every minute of the thrilling drama that has become a television event for fans and critics alike. "Week after week, the entire show is mcdreamy," raves USA Today. Life gets even more intense for the doctors and interns of Seattle Grace Hospital in year two as Meredith and Derek's relationship goes from odd to downright insane with the arrival of Derek's wife, and Alex lets his Izzie obsession out of the bag. You "can't stop watching," says TV Guide. Experience GREY'S ANATOMY: THE COMPLETE SECOND SEASON -- uncut with over five hours of never-before-seen bonus features, including four extended episodes with scenes too steamy for TV, behind-the-scenes interviews, and so much more. In the third season of Grey's Anatomy, one medical intern will get married to a superior while another is left standing at the altar. Two interns will lose their parents. And one main character will try to commit suicide--or not fight very hard to save her own life. There will be multiple hook-ups, infidelity, and trust issues. In between the soap opera-style drama that attracts millions of viewers each week, interns Meredith Grey (Ellen Pompeo), Cristina Yang (Sandra Oh), Izzie Stevens (Katherine Heigl), Alex Karev (Justin Chambers), and George O'Malley (T.R. Knight) will also perform some medical miracles. At the end of season 2, Izzie was distraught over the death of her fiancé, Denny. Now she finds that her very rich boyfriend has left her millions of dollars. Instead of putting the money into the bank and allowing it to accrue interest until she decides what she wants to do with it--as sensible Dr. Miranda Bailey (Chandra Wilson) suggests--Izzie mopes around the house in an irritating stupor. Actually, irritating is an apt description for several of the main characters. It takes a leap of faith to believe that sexy, spectacular, and rich orthopedic surgeon Callie Torres (Sara Ramirez) would be even vaguely interested in wishy-washy George. Previously, he'd convinced himself that he was in love with Meredith. Now he's pining for his other roommate, Izzie, even though he's already got Callie. And rather than welcoming her into their fold, Izzie and Meredith (and to a lesser extent Cristina) give Callie the mean-girls treatment. They may have rebuffed him at one point, but they don't want Callie to have him, either. There is something very needy about this group of interns who have no one to turn to but each other when a crisis occurs.
Grey's Anatomy - The Complete Third Season	2006	1105 mins			USA	Viewers get some insight into "dark and twisty" Meredith's upbringing, as she spends

more time with her cold and demanding mother, who is suffering from Alzheimer's, and her milquetoast father, who didn't fight very hard to have contact with her as a child after her mom kicked him out of their house. It's no wonder Meredith ended up emotionally damaged and unwilling to completely open up to Derek Shepherd (Patrick Dempsey) ... a.k.a. McDreamy. Though the show's title implies that Meredith is the most important character, it's not true. The ensemble cast, which also includes James Pickens Jr. as Dr. Richard Webber (who had a long and complicated affair with Meredith's mother) and Kate Walsh as Derek's ex-wife Addison, is fantastic. And it's difficult to outshine Oh, who has some of this season's funniest and emotional moments as she navigates a relationship with Preston Burke (Isaiah Washington), who is far more romantic and traditional than she is. Though not as compelling as the show's debut season, this third year still packs a strong emotional punch. --Jae-Ha Kim

Rob tries to talk this out and get the opinions of some of his ex girlfriends. He also confides in his best friend Barry (Jack Black) who seems to have issues of his own. Much of the talking takes place in the record store that Rob owns. A lot of the dialogue is about music. Rob searches for meaning through music and through the words of his close friends. Rob realizes he must make a decision. Does he need to grow up and change his priorities or are his priorities just fine the way they are? He tries to get answers in several of his past girlfriends but he doesn't really get any clear answers and his ex girlfriends remember things much differently than he does. Rob seems to realize he may have been more at fault than he originally thought. He gets a little desperate and makes an emotional effort to win Laura back.

Hill Street Blues: The Complete First Season	1981	850 mins	Action	Jack Starrett; Lawrence Levy; Edwin	USA

Created by Steven Bochco and one of television's most influential series, Hill Street Blues was not your father's cop show. The Emmy-winning pilot episode, "Hill Street Station," immediately established the series as less a police procedural than an up-close and personal "interface with the police experience." To establish gritty, documentary-like realism, the show featured sequences, such as the pre-credit roll call, that were filmed with a hand-held camera. There was chaotic, overlapping dialogue. There were sudden, shocking bursts of violence that claimed popular characters. Story lines were not wrapped up at the end of the hour, but instead, unfolded serially throughout the season. It's no wonder that Hill Street, while championed by most critics, was initially not embraced by viewers. It was, in the beginning, one of television's lowest rated shows, its case not helped by NBC's criminal practice of juggling it in its primetime schedule). But there is justice in Hollywood. Hill Street Blues won the Emmy for best drama in its first season. Also honored were several members of the ensemble, including Daniel J. Travanti as the compassionate and incorruptible Precinct Capt. Frank Furillo, Michael Conrad as the avuncular Sgt. Phil Esterhaus (whose cautionary, "Let's be careful out there," became the show's pop culture signature), and Barbara Babcock as the wildly sexual Grace Gardner,

Complete First Season				Sherin; Don Weis		who rocks Esterhaus's world (particularly in the episode that earned her her statuette, "Fecund Hand Rose"). There were no big stars on Hill Street Blues (or, for that matter, no little stars, as one of the cast members jokes during a near-hour-long reunion featurette included as a bonus feature on this three double-sided disc set). Each was an indelible character, among them Charles Haid as cowboy cop Andy Renko, Veronica Hammel as sexy public defender Joyce Davenport, Bruce Weitz as the untamed, animalistic Belker, Keil Martin as LaRue, whose descent into alcoholism is one of the season's most compelling dramatic arcs, and James Sikking as the gung-ho Howard Hunter. Once daring, Hill Street Blues seems almost quaint today, with none of the graphic sex or language that scandalized NYPD Blue (in one episode, a captured cat burglar, portrayed by a pre-L.A. Law Michael Tucker, makes a reference to "wolf pee-pee"). The ethnic portrayals, too, are not exactly nuanced. But the human dramas at the heart of Hill Street still make for arresting television. -- Donald Liebenson

The Hottest State	2006	117 mins	Drama	Ethan Hawke	USA	The Hottest State is a story of a young man and his emotional struggles developed from having an unhappy childhood. Being left by his father (Ethan Hawk) at an early age, the sad experience disabled him to place full trust to anyone trying to create relationships with him. The story evolved as he met a young woman who herself has emotional baggages to bear. The woman had been hurt by past relationships and although they were given the chance to finally acquiesce to each other, the union was purely physical. The woman felt suffocated by the man's tendency to cling fiercely and this left the man vulnerable emotionally once again. After much self examination, the man decided to visit his father in Texas to conquer his own fears. The powerful confrontation will surely melt the viewers' hearts and will surely lead to their own hearts' contemplation.

environment and how man made pollution, if left as it is at the moment, will kill the planet. The film gives a lot of facts and statistics of what was before, what is at present and predicts the future of the environment in all its horrors. It shows the depletion of ice caps in the poles and the effect they would do with rising sea levels. This film is intended to shock companies around the world, who need to take action now to help save the planet. The film concludes with everyone being told that these need not happen and if action is taken these can be prevented.

The Man With The Golden Arm		151 mins		Otto Preminger	USA	Frank Sinatra stars with Kim Novak and Eleanor Parker in this riveting drama about a poker dealer/jazz musician who descends to skid row after becoming addicted to heroin. Will he make it back into the spotlight? or even survive? Based upon the classic American novel by Nelson Algren, The Man with the Golden Arm was far ahead of its time with its depiction of what drugs can do to even an ambitious person. Its cautionary tale still holds up today as heroin has come back to haunt not only the inner city but middle America as well. It contains what Frank Sinatra himself considered his best performance, a role which gained him an Oscar nomination for Best Actor of 1955. Directed by the notorious Otto Preminger, this hard-edged, expressionistic view of the normally-depicted-as-glorious 1950s will come as a fascinating surprise to those who have yet to discover this classic melodrama. Co-starring a young Darren McGavin in his debut film performance, it also contains one of movie score legend Elmer Bernstein's best compositions which earned one of the film's two other Oscar nominations, along with one for art direction. Director Kelly Reichardt, a former assistant on early Todd Haynes films, has enlisted Haynes as an executive producer and Yo La Tengo for soundtrack, lending Old Joy a hipness that it exploits to reveal the relationship between the two main characters. Mark (Daniel London)

Old Joy	2006	76 mins	Drama	Kelly Reichardt	USA	leaves his pregnant wife, Tanya, at home for an excursion into the woods with his hippified buddy, Kurt (Will Oldham). Leaving Portland in Mark's Volvo, with dog in tow, Kurt smoke bowls while Mark navigates into the Cascades backcountry, where the two get temporarily lost then camp until morning, for a hike to paradisiacal Bagby Hot Springs. Slight tension arises out of their divergent lifestyles. Mark's a liberal yuppie, while Kurt's easy drifting underpins his idealism. In key scenes, Kurt verbalizes his fears that the two old friends are losing intimacy. But Kurt's sweetness, for example when he asks, "Is it cool if I sleep in the tent with you?" or massages Mark's shoulders, overrides any real conflict. Cuts to birds chirping, slugs crawling, and campfires raging also relax the viewer as illustrations of the forest's healing power. More a meditation than a packed adventure film, some may find Old Joy slow and meandering, while others will enjoy this pace as precisely the film's point. -- Trinie Dalton
Once	2006	85 mins	Drama; Music	John Carney	USA	An unnamed Czech immigrant girl (Markéta Irglová) has a broken vacuum cleaner. She goes looking for someone to repair the problem, and finds a busking apprentice known only as Guy (Glen Hansard) instead. He, or rather his father the master repairman, quickly gets the problem taken care of. However, Guy and Girl quickly discover a common bond in music. He plays an acoustic guitar on the verge of turning to dust, and she pianos borrowed from the nearby music store. Sicko	2007	123 mins	Documentary	Michael Moore	USA
-------	------	----------	-------------	---------------	-----

In Michael Moore's latest movie, Sicko, the director takes aim at all that is wrong with the American health care system. This is underscored by the nearly 45 million who are without insurance, and even those who are insured receive no guarantees of quality health care at a reasonable price. Moore places the bulk of the blame on the insurance companies. He explains how a system for profit doesn't work, is largely corrupt, and rarely acts in the best interest of the patient. This view is then contrasted with universal health care systems from various modernized countries such as Canada, France, and the United Kingdom. While Moore's commentary can be somewhat politically biased at times, the movie does its job of highlighting a system that is clearly broken and in need of change.

In one version, she catches the train and meets James (John Hannah) with whom she feels an instant connection. Arriving home earlier she surprises her boyfriend Jerry (John Lynch), who lives with her, in bed with a mutual acquaintance, Lydia (Jeanne Tripplehorn). However, in the other version she misses the train, gets mugged and by the time she arrives home Lydia is gone, so Helen carries on her relationship as usual, only subliminally aware that something is not quite right. The film shows how Helen's life differs, all due to a seemingly random chance.
Someone Like You...	2001	97 mins	Comedy; Romance	Tony Goldwyn; Anthony B. Richmond	USA	Jane Goodale (Ashley Judd) has a job at a small television station with the producer Eddie (Hugh Jackman) and a talk show host Diane Roberts (Ellen Barkin). When Ray comes to work there, Jane becomes romantically involved with him. However he breaks up with her and Jane finds out that he was actually seeing Diane. Jane is heartbroken by the betrayal and resolves to figure out exactly why men break up with women, and produces several interesting theories, which she publishes in her friend Liz's (Marisa Tomei) magazine faking the name of a psychologist so that her ideas seem more credible. Most of her theories are based on Eddie, who she thinks is a cheating womanizer, however when she moves in with him she discovered that not all of her theories about him are correct.

Johnny is deployed and meets an overwhelming Bug enemy. Battles are fought, won and lost, friends come and go, soldiers live and die. Johnny's military career teaches him the value of citizenship and how a vote is truly defined.
State Fair	1962	218 mins		José Ferrer; Walter Lang	USA	"I've got that nice, tired old feeling," says Pa Frake near the end of the gentle, sunny 1945 film, State Fair . The Rodgers and Hammerstein music, commissioned while Oklahoma was still making musical-theater history, feels tired too, like the result of a hastily written score. The state of Iowa just can't seem to inspire the same quality music as its more memorable, southern cousin. Remember that State Fair gem "All I Owe Iowa"? Still, it is R and H, and "It Might as Well Be Spring" is here as well as some other decent ditties. There's a country-mouse feeling as the Frake family journeys to the big city for the annual harvest celebration. Young daughter Margy (Jeanne Crain) has her eye on something more exciting than her bore of a fiancé, while her brother meets a lovely big-band singer with a secret. But the bucolic, Old Farmer's Almanac feel is genuine, and it's most obviously a picture of a bygone era when someone expostulates gleefully, "You're gonna be the wife of a journalist!" Not a "don't miss" but not a dismiss either. --Keith Simanton

						Aaron Sorkin, bless him, believes that "the people who watch television shows aren't dumber than the people who make television shows." He also believes that "quality is not anathema to profit." He puts these idealistic words into the mouth of Jordan McDeere (Amanda Peet), the new, impolitic NBS TV president whose first order of business is to revitalize the network's cash cow, Studio 60 on the Sunset Strip , a long-running live late-

Studio 60 On The Sunset Strip: The Complete Series	2006	931 mins	Comedy; Drama	USA	night sketch-comedy series reeling from the Howard Beale-esque on-air meltdown of its creator (Judd Hirsch, alas, limited to the pilot episode). With this Upstairs/Backstage look at Studio 60's tumultuous network politics and stormy personal relationships, Sorkin, the creator of Sports Night and The West Wing, once again tried to raise the bar of prime time fare. That he didn't quite clear it makes this one-season wonder a fascinating object lesson of great hopes and dashed expectations. Studio 60 was perhaps the most hotly debated series of the 2006 season and, love it or hate it, all its strengths and flaws can be savored and savaged anew with this complete-series set. Pretty much above reproach is the ensemble. Matthew Perry and Bradley Whitford head the cast as comedy writer Matt and executive producer Danny, former Studio 60 hands whom Jordan brings back to "save" the show. Steven Weber costars as network chairman Jack Rudolph, who clashes with Jordan over reality programming (he wants it, she doesn't), is embroiled in network negotiations with China, and must fend off angry affiliates offended by such sketches as "Crazy Christians." Jordan contends with becoming tabloid fodder after her ex-husband leaks scandalous details of their past. Meanwhile, Matt, a sardonic atheist, is in a whole Ross and Rachel thing with Harriet (Emmy nominee Sarah Paulson), who is devoutly religious and the show's galvanizing star performer (she does do a mean Holly Hunter). Studio 60 has much to say about comedy in wartime, the divided states of America, the creative process, and patriotism. Some of it is deftly handled, some of it is ham-handed and some of it patronizing. Most of it is delivered in Sorkin's signature chock-a-block style and with walk-and-talk urgency. But even at its most maddening, there are enough riveting moments (a performance by displaced New Orleans musicians in "The Christmas Show"), jaw-dropping developments ("I'm coming for you, Jordan," warns Danny, suddenly-turned romantic stalker), and indelible performances (John Goodman's Emmy-winning turn as a plain-speaking Pahrump, NV judge not impressed with the Hollywood types before him in the two-part "Nevada Day") to make Studio 60 a series worth revisiting, if only as a guilty pleasure. The pilot episode commentary by Sorkin and director Thomas Schlamme, as well as a behind-the-scenes featurette, were produced before the show was canceled, robbing this series' fervent fans of the opportunity for some closure. --Donald Liebensohn
Suddenly	1954	77 mins		Lewis Allen	USA Directly in the wake of his Oscar-winning comeback in From Here to Eternity, Frank Sinatra took on the role of a psychopathic hit man in this taut, low-budget film noir. The choice shows how interested Sinatra was in serious acting during the mid- to late '50s; there's nothing remotely likable about this angular, neurotic assassin. He's in the small town of Suddenly to kill the president, who is passing through on a quick train stop. Sinatra makes hostages of a local family and sheriff Sterling Hayden, and the film is basically a countdown to the president's arrival, with Sinatra's patter getting loonier as the day goes on. Aside from the interest of Sinatra's performance (very focused and downright perverse at times), and the film's place in the American noir tradition, Suddenly is uncannily prophetic on the subject of assassination. It's clear that the killer is doing it for the fame as well as the money, a theme that would crop up in later confessions of real-life killers or would-be killers. Perhaps the 1954 film was too prophetic; like Sinatra's Manchurian Candidate, this movie was pulled from circulation for years after the JFK assassination. According to Kitty Kelley's bio of Sinatra, Lee Harvey Oswald saw this film a few days before he took rifle in hand. Now in the public domain, Suddenly is generally available in cheap, scratchy prints. --Robert Horton

Led by the professor's son, Chris Johnston (Paul Walker), these young men and women must survive the treacheries of a medieval France on the brink of war and get back to the 21st century, but time is quickly running out. The group gets separated and must survive on their own or in pairs, while in the future, the machines and scientists who control their ability to return to their own time are having a breakdown. The future hinges on whether this group can make it back before everything blows up, leaving them stranded in the 14th century.
						When the theatrical release of James Cameron's Titanic was delayed from July to December of 1997, media pundits speculated that Cameron's $200 million disaster epic would cause the director's downfall, signal the end of the blockbuster era, and sink Paramount Studios as quickly as the ill-fated luxury liner had sunk on that fateful night of April 14, 1912. Some studio executives were confident, others horrified, but the clarity of hindsight turned Cameron into an Oscar-winning genius, a shrewd businessman, and one of the most successful directors in the history of motion pictures. Titanic would surpass the $1 billion mark in global box-office receipts (largely due to multiple viewings, the majority by teenage girls), win 11 Academy Awards including best picture and director, produce the best-selling movie soundtrack of all time, and make a global superstar of

Titanic	2005	194 mins	Documentary		UK	Leonardo DiCaprio. A bona fide pop-cultural phenomenon, the film has all the ingredients of a blockbuster (romance, passion, luxury, grand scale, a snidely villain, and an epic, life-threatening crisis), but Cameron's alchemy of these ingredients proved more popular than anyone could have predicted. His stroke of genius was to combine absolute authenticity with a pair of fictional lovers whose tragic fate would draw viewers into the heart-wrenching reality of the Titanic disaster. As starving artist Jack Dawson and soon-to-be-married socialite Rose DeWitt Bukater, DiCaprio and Kate Winslet won the hearts of viewers around the world, and their brief but never-forgotten love affair provides the humanity that Cameron needed to turn Titanic into an emotional experience. Present-day framing scenes (featuring Gloria Stuart as the 101-year-old Rose) add additional resonance to the story, and although some viewers proved vehemently immune to Cameron's manipulations, few can deny the production's impressive achievements. Although some of the computer-generated visual effects look artificial, others--such as the sunset silhouette of Titanic during its first evening at sea, or the climactic splitting of the ship's sinking hull--are state-of-the-art marvels. In terms of sets and costumes alone, the film is never less than astounding. More than anything else, however, the film's overwhelming popularity speaks for itself. Titanic is an event film and a monument to Cameron's risk-taking audacity, blending the tragic irony of the Titanic disaster with just enough narrative invention to give the historical event its fullest and most timeless dramatic impact. Titanic is an epic love story on par with Gone with the Wind, and like that earlier box-office phenomenon, it's a film for the ages. --Jeff Shannon
